

The work of a nurse

1. Read the text and translate in written form

The work of nurses is very important and necessary. A nurse takes care of people who are sick. One must have deep knowledge and master his profession to treat people and fight against diseases. A good medical worker must be honest, unselfish, hard-working, attentive to people, responsible for work.

Every nurse must remember that there are no two identical people and that every patient will react to diseases in his own way. That's why each patient needs special care.

A future nurse studies at the medical college to learn how to give good care to sick people. "Nursing Affair" department gives qualification of a nurse of general practice. A medical nurse is a chief assistant of a doctor. She provides uninterrupted medical help, including preventive and rehabilitation measures. The graduates can work in the polyclinics, hospitals, kindergartens, schools, houses for aged people, emergency ambulances, in the military hospitals.

2. Answer the questions

1. What traits of character must a good medical worker have?
2. Where does a future nurse study?
3. What does a ward nurse do in the morning at the hospital?

3. Write the definitions for the following concepts.

1. A device that measures temperature.
2. This is a piece of paper using for heating, containing inside mustard.
3. The means for moving of the patients in a seated position.